

CITATION—DISTINGUISHED ALUMNUS AWARD

Presented to

CHARLES CLIFFORD CALLAHAN

In Appreciation

of his fidelity and dedicated service to the College of Law of The Ohio State University and his immeasurable contributions to its pursuit of excellence.

His tenure on the faculty of this College now spans a period of twenty-eight years and has brought him to the rare distinction of senior member of an unusually talented and diverse teaching assemblage.

He is nationally known and regarded by the law teaching profession as one of its outstanding preceptors.

He personally has taught and counselled more than three thousand students or three-fourths of the College's living alumni and is a prominent symbol of the tie that binds them in loyal affection to his and their alma mater.

He has been a pillar of support to six deans of the College and a sage and steadying counsellor to scores of faculty colleagues, ever conscious of the higher duty owed by all to the ancient profession and the enduring institution they are privileged briefly to serve.

His constant efforts toward excellence in legal education have had a profound effect on the bar of his native State. His untiring support of all for which the College stands has been a beacon of inspiration to thousands of students who have been grounded in the discipline and pride of a noble profession in his classrooms.

For the mountains of blue books he has so carefully graded and the hours, months and years he has accorded to superb Socratic training of lawyers; for his unswerving devotion to his calling as student, teacher and alumnus; for his dedication to his profession and to its tradition of learning; for his tenacious and successful determination never to compromise his own granite-like integrity; and for his demonstrated and reciprocated affection for this College, he shall henceforth be known as one of its graduates honored by the title

DISTINGUISHED ALUMNUS

Dated this fifth day of November, A.D. 1971.